Achieving food sovereignty, agroecology and biocultural diversity is a transformative process that seeks to expand the realms of democracy and freedom by regenerating a diversity of autonomous food systems based on social justice and ecological sustainability (Pimbert, 2008). As part of this transformation, 1 social movements are

FOOD SOVEREIGNTY, AGROECOLOGY AND BIOCULTURAL DIVERSITY

A revolution paradigm was needed to establish the required knowledge systems to attain food sovereignty and agroecology. This concept entails the construction of technical and policy-related knowledge that is actively shaped by food producers and consumers, rather than through top-down research and the hegemony of scientism, the privatization of research, and commodification of knowledge.

Food Sovereignty, Agroecology and Biocultural Diversity is essential reading for all who can see that the dominant paradigm has run its course. We need both to rethink, and to rethink the way that we think. Colin Tudge is co-founder of The College for Real Farming and Food Culture.

Resurgence • Article - There is Another Way

By using systemic and participatory approaches, agroecology articulates frontier knowledge based on different scientific disciplines combined with popular biocultural knowledge. At the same time, agroecology presents itself as a critical theory that poses a radical questioning of industrial agriculture and the corporate food regime.

Food sovereignty also includes environmental preservation for future generations. In terms of ways of action, according to Miguel Altieri, professor of agroecology, food sovereignty has to be based on agroecology, which can ensure food security while preserving natural resources and biodiversity.

Food sovereignty - Dictionary of agroecology

WhyHunger is proud to release its first agroecology publication, "Agroecology: Putting Food Sovereignty into Action.". Agroecology is an agricultural method based on the traditional knowledge of those who cultivate the land and a way of life. We believe its practice is critical to addressing global hunger and increasing communities' access to basic resources such as land, water and seeds.

Agroecology Putting Food Sovereignty in Action | WhyHunger

The People's Agroecology Process emerged in 2015 as a grassroots-led initiative to scale out agroecology in the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico. It was inspired by the work of allied organizations involved in the transnational peasant and small-scale farmer movement, La Via Campesina—the world's largest rural social movement with [...]
