Most commonly, the hybrid structure combines the functional and product organizational structures. A functional structure is where the company is organized by what people do. For example, all marketing personnel are overseen by a marketing manager, and all sales personnel are overseen by a sales manager. In a product organization, the business is divided by lines of business, such as a baby food manufacturer having specific groups for dry snacks, jarred food and toddler meals.

It's Visual Vocabulary Month here at Verbal To Visual. Our goal this month of May is to build up a set of quickly-drawable icons and sketches for the most frequently-used visual references – things like light bulbs, houses, pencils, maybe even a stick figure or two – that you can easily break out when relevant ideas come up during sketchnoting or doodling sessions.
