Many statistical books, particularly multivariate ones, are, - let's face it- boring, heavy-going and ugly. Formulae are used as if to terrify and frighten, not to illustrate or show, and textual passages are all too often chock full of outright fibs such as 'it will be clear that', or, 'the reader will see that' or - a sure sign that something truly monstrous is to follow - 'it is obvious that'.

I rated this text high because it is an excellent guide to those using multivariate statistics. There are many theoretical issues and assumptions that underlie the use of multiple regression, discriminant analysis, logistic regression, MANOVA, and other parametric statistical procedures.
