The distinction between these two terms tells the history and development of how popular/mass culture has been viewed and analysed in the social- and human sciences - and how critical the analysts were of the described. The old marxist cultural critics (e.g. Adorno/Horkheimer/The Frankfurt-school) saw mass culture as a capitalist invention, where the market forces overtook the cultural sphere, and produced mindless mass-produced culture with monetary aims. (see Adorno og Horkheimer – The ...
