Dry Aging Of Beef Beef

Dry aging is a process whereby beef carcasses, primals, and/or subprimals are stored – without protective packaging – at refrigeration temperatures for one to five weeks to allow the natural enzymatic and biochemical processes that result in improved tenderness and the development of the unique flavor that can only be described as “dry-aged beef.”

Dry-Aging of Beef

Dry aging consists of placing unpackaged meat in a chiller under controlled temperature, humidity and airflow. Wet ageing is widely used in commercial beef production in England. This involves storage of the meat in vacuum packs, usually for 7 to 21 days.

Dry ageing produces a very tender finished product. The cuts of beef are hung in a dry, cool environment for at least 28 days. This is what we have found to be the most beneficial time scale for best results for aging beef. During this time, the muscle tissue loses water through evaporation which has the effect of intensifying the flavour of the meat and results in less shrinkage during cooking.

WHY WE DRY AGE. By hanging the beef carcasses on-the-bone and dry ageing the beef, it naturally allows the enzymes to react, breaking down the muscle fibres and connective tissues, resulting in improved texture and flavor which gives the meat its tenderness. Through the process of dry ageing, you also lose moisture in the beef, concentrating the flavors, and giving you a depth of flavor only achieved by the process of dry ageing.
