Prutow’s basic point is that most sermons don’t have a point. They may have points, but they don’t have a point. They have hundreds of sentences, but they can’t be summed up in one sentence. The world of drama and storytelling calls this a “throughline,” the connecting theme that ties together each part of a narrative or speech.

So Pastor, What's Your Point? | HeadHeartHand Blog

Dennis Prutow recently wrote a great book on preaching called So, Pastor, What’s Your Point. His point was that we can preach for 40 minutes plus and leave people none the wiser. “What was all that about?” people ask each other as they leave. There may have been lots of good ideas but no real point to what was being said.
