Opera "La Damnation de Faust". - YouTube

The question has often been asked. When, after Berlioz's death, the work became hugely popular in France its quasi-scenic vividness for long eclipsed the works he wrote for the opera house. But, from the first, it was conceived for the concert hall. As Berlioz himself described it, La damnation de Faust is 'an opera without decor or costumes'. It is an opera of the mind's eye performed on an ideal stage of the imagination; we see it more vividly than any visual medium could depict it ...
