Indoor Air Quality And Control

If we can't control the weather and have trouble on a national level controlling air pollution then we can at least try to control indoor air quality. Ventilation is needed in buildings to replenish used oxygen from the air and displace the carbon dioxide we exhale.

Indoor air quality - Designing Buildings Wiki Indoor Air Quality and Control. This is our largest field of applications today. You will find our sensors in residential, commercial, and official buildings. The primary task is to save energy by regulating the air flow according to need. The more people in a building, the more CO2 is exhaled. For example, this means that a shopping mall most probably needs less ventilation on a Monday afternoon than at the same time on a Friday.
