Imaging of Acute Hepatobiliary Dysfunction | Radiology Key

Overview. A hepatobiliary iminodiacetic acid (HIDA) scan is an imaging procedure used to diagnose problems of the liver, gallbladder and bile ducts. For a HIDA scan, also known as cholescintigraphy and hepatobiliary scintigraphy, a radioactive tracer is injected into a vein in your arm. The tracer travels through your bloodstream to your liver, where the bile-producing cells take it up.

Liver imaging can now estimate liver concentrations following the injection of hepatobiliary contrast agents and radiotracers. However, how these concentrations are created is partially unknown. For these reasons, we encouraged the submission of basic, translational, and clinical studies that increase the understanding of liver imaging with hepatobiliary contrast media.

Radiography and ultrasonography are the most well-established and frequently used imaging modalities for diagnosing hepatic disease in veterinary medicine.

Contrast-enhanced harmonic ultrasound imaging of the liver is being established in veterinary medicine for the assessment of liver perfusion, hemodynamic alterations in the presence of portosystemic shunts (PSSs), and differentiation of benign from malignant hepatic nodules.
