Rational Suicide In The Elderly

This book provides a comprehensive view of rational suicide in the elderly, a group that has nearly twice the rate of suicide when chronically ill than any other demographic. Its frame of reference does not endorse a single point-of-view about the legitimacy of rational suicide, which is evolving across societies with little guidance for geriatric mental health professionals.

Rational Suicide in the Elderly: Clinical, Ethical, and ...

This book provides a comprehensive view of rational suicide in the elderly, a group that has nearly twice the rate of suicide when chronically ill than any other demographic. Views of rational suicide are evolving, particularly because of a growing older population with a longer life expectancy. However, there is little guidance for geriatric mental health professionals about this.

Rational Suicide in the Elderly | SpringerLink

While claiming to not take a view on “whether suicide in non-terminally ill elderly adults can be rational”, Dr. Balasubramaniam states that “It is important to consider the possibility that the combination of negative perceptions toward aging and dependency, greater social isolation, increasing access to drugs, greater need for autonomy, and an overall generational familiarity with suicide may be accounting for a higher proportion of older adults like Mr.

“Rational” Suicide and the “Elderly” | nancyvalko

on rational suicide in older adults. We believe that trends toward rational suicidal thoughts in part stem from a confluence of three factors—neoliberalism, technology, and changing attitudes related to the legalization of physician-assisted death (PAD) in some states. By spotlighting this effect of sociological trends on rational suicide, we empha-

Social Causes of Rational Suicide in Older Adults

” In the UK “rational suicide in the elderly” (or better, in the incurably ill who feel that they have unacceptably low quality of life), seems under researched. Work done by Dignity in Dying suggests that 7% of suicides were by people who were “terminally ill”. The percentage of suicides which could be considered to be rational suicides of those whose quality of life is intolerable due to incurable health conditions, is likely to be significantly larger.
