Seaweeds are green, brown and red marine macroalgae. Extracts of brown seaweeds are widely used in horticulture crops largely for their plant growth-promoting effects and for their ameliorating effect on crop tolerance to abiotic stresses such as salinity, extreme temperatures, nutrient deficiency and drought.

Seaweed extracts as biostimulants in horticulture

First, farming seaweed does not require any freshwater, fertiliser or external inputs; there is no need to repurpose or clear land for its production. Seaweed also contributes to overall ocean health by addressing acidification and removing up to 20,000 tonnes of nitrogen and 2000 tonnes of phosphorus from European waters per year in 2030.
