Leading the Revolution is an important book of business scholarship. It proposes a higher standard for companies: Constantly establishing and superbly implementing improved business models for customer interfaces, core strategy, using strategic resources, and value networks.

"Leading the Revolution", which deals with fostering innovation in business settings, was first published in 2000. Nevertheless, many of the ideas and suggestions that Hamel proposes are still fresh and relevant. Some of the case-studies, however, are a bit dated (the best example of this are the more than 10 pages to praise innovation at Enron).
